

GEORGE RAYMOND HARMON

When "Red" enters a room, one of two things must happen. Either he turns around and goes out or—. "Red" is really known only to a few people because of his quietness (?). When George is shaved and dons a clean collar, he compares favorably with any of the clothing advertisement models, and combining as he does a pleasant disposition, charm of manner, and sparkling wit, is a great favorite among the fair sex. Someone discovered these qualities long before we did however, and "Red's" chief occupation is writing letters.
